LABOR'S ARMY

Nearly 50,000 Men March in Two Great Parades.

Most Imposing of Labor Day Celebrations in New York.

Federation and Central Union Turn Out with Full Ranks.

Programmes Carried Out with Not a Missing Incident.

Picnics, Games and Dancing to Complete the Day's Festivities.

New York's mighty hosts of Organized Labor turned out in greater force to-day than ever before on the occurrence of Labor Day.

There were two parades, each of them gigantic in proportions, and not less than 50,000 men marched behind the standards of their respective organizations. The parades were those of the Central Labor Union and the Central Labor Federation.

These two great organizations are working for the same ends, differing only in their methods.

The Central Labor Union, which has 1,200 members, and the Central Labor Federation, which has 1,000 members, are the two largest labor organizations in New York City.

colors and with an immense forepiece. It was mounted on wheels, and twenty men and boys rode under it. It was inscribed, "All under one coat."

The parade was a banner in various novel forms by the several organizations in this division.

Moving promptly at the hour, Capt. John H. McCullagh and a hundred bluecoats maintained order in Second avenue from Houston street to Fifth, where the Federation parade was formed, and the great body moved at 10:30 o'clock to the inspiring strains from many bands, their banners waving and the throngs of mothers, sisters, wives, daughters and sweethearts applauding.

Roundsmen Frazier and eight of the biggest men in the Broadway squad led the way.

GRAND MARSHAL AUGUST DELABAR.

Central Federation of Labor, as an escort, and at Tompkins Square Park that parade was reviewed and admired by ten thousand women and children, the families of the paraders.

This afternoon many of the Federation paraders and their families go to pleasant Valley for an outing, taking passage on excursion barges at the foot of West Thirty-fourth street.

Hosts of the Central Labor Union. The demonstration by the Central Labor Union was not less imposing. Inspector Williams and 100 policemen overlooked the preparations for the Union's parade with Cooper Union as the central point.

The several bodies taking part in this parade assembled in the streets from Sixth to Thirtieth, and at 10:30 o'clock, the parade was reviewed and admired by ten thousand women and children, the families of the paraders.

"Six Six," the greatest of American Typographical Unions, had, as a matter of course, the right of the line and led the parade. The World's chapel, with the Catholic Protective Band, attracted much attention. The men marched to the music of a splendid band, composed entirely of new pieces played by youthful musicians. The chapel lifted the voice to the pace-making strains of the "Oude's March."

The Union parade was escorted by Roundsmen Queens, Warle and eight giants from the Broadway squad, and Grand Marshal Rogers gave the order to march at 10 o'clock.

RAILROAD STRIKERS IN LINE. One of the most conspicuous bodies in the Central Union's parade was that of the New York Central strikers. There were 1,200 of them from the Thirtieth and Sixty-fifth street freight yards. They were dressed in plain attire, and carried only one banner—banners of white satin, was simply "New York Central and Hudson River Railway Employees."

The strikers were under the command of Marshal Thomas Garvey, with Charles Salisbury and Miles Burke as aides. They were cheered enthusiastically all along the line, and the line of the parade was simply "New York Central and Hudson River Railway Employees."
